2. Describe how this peer discussion changed your practice for the benefit of the people using your services.

I am studying and working toward becoming a 'qualified person' in the pharmaceutical industry. I do not work with patients so the people who use my services are other health professionals or scientific colleagues. My peer has been coaching me for the last year on the areas of the study guide for Qualified Persons and has worked with me on how I answer questions.

Through the peer discussion I have identified that I need to make explicit parts of an answer that seem self-evident to display my understanding. To do this, we worked standard structure to the way that I answer questions to lead both me and those I work with through the answers to the questions I am posed. The outcome of this learning has been that I have been using these techniques in coaching sessions with my sponsor, in peer to peer practice sessions and in mock oral examinations. The feedback from these has been good, including specific feedback on the structure I use to answer questions. In addition, it has been noted, in my daily work with colleagues and customers, that they can clearly understand my thinking when I use this technique to work through problem solving and risk management in my day-to-day work with my colleagues.
